

As Africa undergoes a re-birth in the 21st century with the winds of progress blowing across the continent, the 2010 World Cup offers a unique opportunity to showcase the positive aspects of our country and continent. Our spirit of caring and togetherness, our natural resources, our cultural diversity and economic development are just some of the wonders of African life that we can share with the rest of the world.

As was the case in the bid for the 2006 World Cup, Castle Lager and South African football are once again partners in the quest for the 2010 World Cup. This is a relationship that has grown over the years.

We are confident that the efforts of the bid chairman, Mr Irvin Khosa, Chief Executive Officer, Mr Danny Jordaan, their dedicated staff at the bid office and the support of all South Africans will be a key factor in the success of the 2010 bid.

Dear Mr Oliphant,

MESSAGE OF SUPPORT TO THE SA 2010 WORLD CUP BID BY SANCO

On behalf of the members of the South African National Civic Organisation (SANCO) and SANCO's National Executive Committee we hereby formally unveil our unconditional and the most deserved support to the SA 2010 World Bid Committee.

SANCO is the single largest community based civic organisation in South Africa and has decided to support the bid to host the 2010 Football World Cup. We observe that South Africa has in its recent past successfully hosted numerous global and continental events, whose memory shall be forever etched in our minds.

The World Cup will, undoubtedly, provide an opportunity for Africa to display her utmost commitment to the game of football and further arouse the most desired spirit of oneness. Africa as a continent has been denied, over the years, the opportunity to host this prestigious event.

SA has also succeeded in developing world class facilities and properties that would, without any amount of difficulty, host the football's mobile economy. The minimum capacity requirements can be met with only a marginal expansion, therefore SA deserves to be the first host in Africa. The requisite leadership, management and coordination skills have reached exciting proportions. Support for football has grown in the hearts of many South Africans and the overall public support for the event can be easily guaranteed.

In active support, we also pledge to encourage as much volunteers as possibly required, with a view to ensure the most comfortable stay & services to our fellow football guests.

The beautiful game shall have the most beautiful experience when the Football World Cup shall take place in South Africa in 2010!

SA 2010 SOCCER WORLD CUP BID

As Africa's premier sports broadcaster and official media supplier for South Africa's bid to host the 2010 soccer World Cup tournament, SuperSport is proud to be a member of a dynamic campaign team.

We at SuperSport believe in

- South Africa's ability to organise and stage the event
- South Africa and Africa's right to host the 2010 tournament, and
- The insight, goodwill and fairness of the world's soccer leaders

We are, therefore, confident that South Africa's bid will be successful and that the country, the continent and the sport itself will benefit immensely from it.

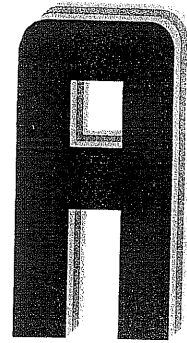

The bid process has already provided an ideal for all South Africans to strive for. It has already done much to unite the whole population of this young democracy. To host World Cup 2010 has become a national dream all South Africans share. The government, the business sector, football fans and sports enthusiasts have joined hands to make it come true.

World Cup 2010 has the potential to be one of the most important achievements in the history of South Africa and Africa. If awarded to South Africa, it will certainly be the most important sporting event ever held on the continent.

The social, psychological and economic benefits of staging this tournament have been well documented — benefits to South Africa as well as the whole continent and world football.

Having staged immensely successful World Cup rugby and cricket tournaments, as well as the All-Africa Games and other major events, South Africa has shown its ability to host occasions of this nature.

Re: Message of support to SA 2010 Soccer World Cup Bid

The Tourism Business Council of South Africa (TBCSA), wishes to confirm its support to the SA 2010 Soccer World Cup bid.

TBCSA is the umbrella body which attends to the macro issues affecting the tourism industry in South Africa and hence would welcome the FIFA World Cup in 2010, as events of this magnitude are a great opportunity to develop new and strengthen existing relations with the rest of the world.

We are confident in the South African ability to host this event as shown by the recently hosted World Summit on Sustainable Development and 2003 Cricket World Cup. Both events delivered an exceptionally high standard in infrastructure, logistics, safety, hospitality, and unity across all sectors to deliver these outstandingly successful events. The Cricket World Cup in particular was hailed as being unique in that no negative incidents were reported.

The positive economic "spin off" of such events to the tourism industry can only improve our growth and development as shown in our recent figures with South Africa being the largest growing tourism destination.

We wish SA 2010 Bid Company all the success with their bid and are confident in their highly skilled team to lead this initiative. We look forward to welcoming international supporters, media and guests to South Africa.

Telkom SA Limited is Africa's largest communications services provider with modern telecommunications infrastructure capable of supporting major world events. As a model corporate citizen, Telkom has become a household name in South Africa sport, featuring prominently in the national soccer calendar through its sponsorship of the annual Telkom Charity Cup soccer tournament.

The company's involvement in South African soccer is well documented, having supported the country's 2006 Soccer World Cup Bid. Losing the 2006 bid did not shake Telkom's commitment to South African football.

Recently, the company proudly demonstrated its commitment to soccer by announcing its support of the South African 2010 Soccer World Cup bid. In so doing, Telkom joined in the country's quest to bring the world's biggest sporting event to South Africa.

The economic spin-offs, which would flow from South Africa hosting the 2010 international soccer showpiece, would go a long way in boosting tourism, creating jobs, bringing foreign currency and giving the country's companies exposure to the world as being capable of providing world-class services.

As the leading telecommunications group in Africa, Telkom prides itself of having state-of-the-art fibre and satellite technology to support the Host Broadcaster, and all other communications and broadcasting requirements for the 2010 FIFA World Cup.

For Telkom, providing the best communications infrastructure for this event will not be an experiment, having recently demonstrated the capability and reliability of its network during the ICC Cricket World Cup early this year.

We have consistently demonstrated our ability to host major sporting events that require a sophisticated telecommunications infrastructure, including personal voice and data communications, information dissemination and security expertise.

Other world events at which Telkom provided world-class communication services include the 1995 Rugby World Cup, the 1996 African Cup of Nations, the World Conference Against Racism, the World Aids Conference, the World Summit for Sustainable Development and the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting.

These events were of international standard staged across South Africa, and required no less than world-class quality service. And Telkom, powered by its capable network, met these requirements.

Telkom's National Network Operations Centre and the National Business Solutions Centre – the hi-tech hub of the company's convergence business in Pretoria – will support an integrated broadband network throughout the tournament.

Telkom is fully behind South Africa's 2010 Bid Company in its endeavour to bring the 2010 FIFA World Cup tournament to South Africa. As the telecommunications service provider for the event, Telkom will supply quality service and help bring all the world cup action to millions of soccer-loving people the world over.

May the 2010 FIFA World Cup tournament come South Africa's way. To both the South African Football Association and the SA 2010 Bid Company executive, Telkom would like to say we are behind you all the way, and wish you the best of luck.

Dear Sir

Communication, partnerships and backing from big business is the key to a successful SA 2010 World Cup Bid campaign. This is why Vodacom and Telkom are jointly sponsoring the SA 2010 Bid. This partnership is indicative of both of our commitment to South Africa and Africa at large.

Vodacom is indeed not only South Africa's but Africa's leading cellular network with over 8 million subscribers on the African continent as we not only operate in the rainbow nation but Tanzania, Lesotho and the Democratic Republic of the Congo as well.

Three years after the heartache of losing the 2006 Soccer World Cup to Germany, it is Africa's turn and South Africa is the perfect stage for this. Africa has yet to host a FIFA World Cup showpiece and the time has come for all South Africans to show the world just how passionate a footballing country we are in our bid to host the 2010 World Cup in SA.

The Rainbow Nation is superbly equipped to stage the tournament, and would, I'm sure, present a vibrant, colourful and highly organised event.

Our culturally diverse democracy serves as an inspiration to the world; we boast first-class telecommunications, rail, road and air travel infrastructures; we are supported by sophisticated tourism industries; we are the corporate and economic hub of Africa; we have numerous state-of-the-art stadia and have staged more high-profile international events during the last decade than many developed nations. And we South Africans have that extra magic that turns events into unforgettable showpieces.

It is this magic that is part of the winning Vodacom formula following Vodacom's involvement with the successful 1995 Rugby World Cup hosted in this country.

Our history has taught us to relentlessly believe in our dreams, and has set us new goal posts in what we can achieve together when we do believe in our dreams together. We are therefore honoured to be part of the Bid campaign that will lead the hopes of the rainbow nation in a bid to bring football's greatest showpiece, the FIFA World Cup, to make its debut as part of the African renaissance, in our beautiful, football crazy country.

At Vodacom, we are convinced that communication is the key to the future and with the powerful technological backing of Vodacom and our bid sponsor partner Telkom - Africa and South Africa, your time has come!!

The Gauteng Provincial Government supports South Africa's bid to host the 2010 FIFA World Cup Finals.

Africa, despite its proven capacity and ability, has waited for far too long to host the world's most popular sport tournament. We can't wait any longer.

South Africa has already demonstrated its capacity and ability to host international events of the same magnitude as the FIFA World Cup. All the previous events that we hosted including the 2003 Cricket World Cup, the All Africa Games in 1999 and the 1995 Rugby World Cup were exceptionally successful.

In addition to these highly successful sporting events, in 2002 we hosted the World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg – the largest ever United Nations gathering to be held in Africa. Thousands of the people who had come from all parts of the world to take part in the Johannesburg discussions are still telling stories of how successful the summit how well they were received and treated by the people of South Africa, Gauteng in particular.

Just as it has done on previous occasions, the Gauteng Provincial Government will do everything within its powers and ability to make the 2010 FIFA World Cup finals a resounding success.

Among other things, the Gauteng Provincial Government will, together with the other spheres of government and the soccer fraternity, put in place the necessary infrastructure for the games and ease the movement of people.

The people of Gauteng are ready to extend their warm arms to the magnitudes of soccer players, administrators, officials, special guests, politicians, supporters and all the other people who will be part of the 2010 FIFA World Cup Finals.

We are all ready for the games. Let the 2010 FIFA Cup come to South Africa.
