RHINO: Ruthlessly hunted by bounty hunters, the black and white rhino are passionately protected across South Africa. With fine smell and poor eyes, however, the prehistoric rhino remains on the brink of being classified 'endangered'.

Loftus

Named in memory of a leading sports administrator, Mr. Loftus Versfeld, after he suffered a heart attack in the east stand in 1938, 'Loftus' stands as one of the capital city's most familiar landmarks.

The Stadium is situated scarcely two kilometres from the city centre, in the heart of an attractive, tree-lined residential area that accommodates row upon row of foreign embassies.

Through the apartheid years, reflecting the prejudice of local residents, the city council resolutely refused permission for football to be played in what was then preserved as a bastion of rugby.

However, times have changed and Sundowns, one of South Africa's leading professional clubs, now calls Loftus home.

The main west stand was completely rebuilt in 1977, and the other three stands have been rebuilt since, creating an impressive arena, that rises steeply on all sides and incorporates some of the country's finest facilities for corporate hospitality.

Minimal upgrading will be required for the Stadium to qualify as a venue for first and second round matches, but the floodlights, sound system and scoreboards will all be improved.

Designated Media areas will be created in the lower level of the west stand, from where the celebrated Loftus roar should give the world's journalists something to write home about.

Capacity (excluding VIPs and Media): 45,000
Opened: 1906, and renovated many times
Completion of minor upgrade: April 2005

Rainbow Junction

Private enterprise has identified the business opportunity of creating a world class football stadium north of Pretoria.

The result of their research is Rainbow Junction, a new sports complex comprising a stadium and an attached indoor sports arena to be built on an undeveloped agricultural smallholding.

San Grato Investments in conjunction with the Sinovich family intend to drive the construction of this futuristic facility.

The Rainbow Junction Stadium will be characterised by a bold and imaginative leaf-shaped canopy that covers the Stadium's main stand under one side, and effectively covers the indoor sports arena beneath the other side.

It is intended that the other three sides of the structure shall rise steeply from the touchline and be open.

The new Stadium has been conceived both to meet the requirements of a venue to stage first and second round matches in the 2010 FIFA World Cup™ and to address the longer terms needs and desires of a historically deprived local community.

The common need is clear, and the innovative private/public funding plans demonstrate South Africa's ability to create its world class facilities in a viable and responsible manner.

To be constructed from scratch, the new Stadium will meet all FIFA Requirements.

Capacity (excluding VIPs and Media): 41,000
Scheduled date of completion: November 2007
Distance from Central District: 8 km

CITY PROFILE

Rustenburg stands in a region that provides more than 75% of the world's supply of platinum. This exceptional mineral wealth combines with an outstanding climate to guarantee a high quality of life and promote a general sense of peace and prosperity.

In recent years, the council and local businesses have started a series of bold initiatives to expand the regional economy from its historic mining base, of platinum and chrome, generating economic growth, new jobs and a fast-increasing population.

However, Rustenburg is far more than the economic dynamo of the North West province. It is an established city, nestling in the foothills of the ancient Magaliesberg mountains, an area of natural beauty, enriched by thousands of important Stone Age and Iron Age settlements, waterfalls, streams and lush vegetation.

Sun City, the world famous resort, is located nearby, offering four top class hotels, two 18-hole golf courses, a man-made beach, an entertainment centre, casinos and much more, all created by a vivid imagination in the crater of an extinct volcano.

The Royal Bafokeng Sports Palace, a proposed venue for the 2010 FIFA World Cup™ in South Africa, is

SPORTING HERITAGE

Rustenburg's passion for football is amply proven by the fact that the two largest professional clubs in South Africa frequently choose to play home league matches in the city.

Kaizer Chiefs are frequent tenants of Olympia Park, and Orlando Pirates regularly attract large crowds to the Royal Bafokeng Sports Palace.

Olympia Park staged three group matches during the 1995 Rugby World Cup and has also hosted the South African National Athletics Championships. On both occasions, the local population rose to the occasion and created a memorable vibe.

Teams that are drawn to play in Rustenburg are assured of a warm welcome and a passionate crowd.

located close to Rustenburg on land administered by the Royal Bafokeng nation.

In total, more than 900 square kilometres stand under control of a tribal authority and headed by a Monarch. King Leruo Molotlegi, the 30th in line of a dynasty that began with Phofu in 1140, presides over 24 sub-villages and a wealth of platinum reserves.

The Bafokeng-Bakwena people are a peaceful tribe and their nature is accurately reflected in their emblem: a crocodile (kwena) leaning towards the water, with its mouth closed, posing no threat.

BUFFALO: Usually found in large herds, distinguished by large, heavy horns, physically immense, buffalo are splendid to behold, and dangerous to upset, as many human victims would testify.

Only minor renovations will be required to bring the Royal Bafokeng Sports Palace into line with requirements for a stadium able to host first and second round matches at a FIFA World Cup™.

This reality underlines the excellence of the venue, opened in 1999 and completely funded by the Royal Bafokeng community, an administrative entity that functions within North West province and presides over the world's richest platinum mines.

The Stadium is located on open land, offering easy access and extensive parking facilities for local supporters and those who make the comfortable 90-minute drive from Johannesburg.

As a multi-purpose venue used by the community, the venue includes an athletics track, but the oval bowl structure maintains a degree of intimacy and engenders an excellent atmosphere.

The Stadium capacity will be increased to 40,000, excluding VIPs and Media, by the scheduled construction of two additional rows of seats in the concourse on the second level.

For 2010, essentially cosmetic measures such as installation of new electronic scoreboards and upgrading of the floodlights and public address system will render the Royal Bafokeng Sports Palace ready to welcome the football supporters of the world.
